Through a joint discussion among philosophers, educators, and practitioners from the public sector and education, this workshop aims to explore how contemporary educational practices contribute to the realization of individual well-being and social stability, with particular emphasis on the question of social welfare, justice and inclusivity. We are interested in understanding the relation between education, virtue and a good life, wisdom and civic friendship. Our aim is to question not only the educational process itself, but the virtues of those who work within it, primarily educators. In addition, we are looking to understand the specific contribution of arts subjects within educational curricula to the realization of well-being and welfare, with particular emphasis on the inclusion of social groups that are marginalized on the basis of race, gender, socioeconomic status, mental abilities, and age.
